50X1-HUM

1. [redacted] the small railroad station of Kekok, from which climbers depart for the summit of Myohyang-san (126-13, 39-58) (BV 6227), was rear headquarters for the North Korean Army General Service Bureau and the North Korean Ministry of Internal Affairs General Service Bureau (Hubang Ch'ong Kuk). The commander of the former [redacted] was CHANG Si-u (長時雨). [redacted] there were ten Chinese Communist tanks stationed at Kekok. 50X1-HUM
2. [redacted] KIM Il-song was living at Yongak-san (125-37, 39-02) (YD 2623), between Pyongyang and Chinnampo. He frequently visited Kekok for relaxation. [redacted] he worked and lived at Kosanjin (126-08, 41-03) (BA 5948). 50X1-HUM
3. [redacted] North Korean government installations were in the following locations: 50X1-HUM
 - a. Many political, military and Communist Party organizations were using civilian houses on the small hill surrounding Pyongyang Stadium and other nearby residences.
 - b. North Korean State Security Bureau Headquarters were along the railroad from Pyongyang to Yongsong (125-47, 39-07) (YD 4133), approximately five miles north of Pyongyang and a few hundred feet south of the highway to Sunan (125-41, 39-12) (YD 3242), which branches off the main Pyongyang-Yongsong highway. The headquarters occupied a two-story western-style building and a Korean-style building, both surrounded by thick pine trees and almost invisible from the air.
 - c. The embassies of the USSR, Communist China, Mongolia, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and Poland were in Manpojin (126-17, 41-09) (BA 7259). The North Korean State Security Bureau also had a branch there. (See Attachment A).
